THE MOSAIC SYNTHESIS OF THE GEORGIAN-CAUCASIAN COMMON VALUES

A lot of common features may be revealed in everyday life and religious customs of the Caucasian peoples.

The article is dealing with the parallels between Georgian and Vainakh (the Chachan and the Ingush) peoples in defining seasons according to natural conditions. It results from the Georgian and Vainakh common model of the world structure becoming concrete in local agricultural and geographical conditions.

In our opinion the ethnographic material and the language data present the proof of the problem.
