

MANANA TABIDZE

QUESTIONS OF THE GEORGIAN SCIENTIFIC LANGUAGE IN THE 21ST CENTURY

Georgian as the national language is a subject of the constitutional protection. Obviously, the language of education should be Georgian in the country. However, in all the regions of Georgia, for various reasons, it is not the case. Lately even Tbilisi the capital city has conceded the advantage to other languages. These questions demand timely assessment and working out public opinion.

The 21st century has begun with a renewed wave of the technical progress accompanied by the unprecedented scales of the globalization. Naturally, the process raises severe problems for the language – which is apt to respond to any newness.

Language, as the mirror of the human life, strives to pace demands of the reflection of new concepts and opinions and marks novelty in community's everyday life and activities in various fields. That is why every subsequent edition of dictionaries considerably differs from the previous ones; particularly, this can be said about the dictionaries of the different fields of sciences and of words of special uses, which are far more international than the general literary language dictionaries.