GRIGOL ROBAQIDZE'S WORKS OF EMIGRATION PERIOD

Most of Grigol Robakidze's (1880-1962) writings during his emigration were written in German. Therefore, for a large part of Georgians in general and the specialists in particular this part of Robakidze's literary heritage has not been sufficiently dealt with by scholars so far.

Thankfully, today Georgian translations of Grigol Robakidze's famous German writings are accessible to the readers.

The proposed article aims at providing those interested in Gr. Robakidze's works with a clearer understanding of the great writer's literary heritage of the emigration period in Germany.

During the emigration period a main basis for Grigol Robakidze's literary inspiration was still artistic expression of challenges faced by Georgia, and problems related to the Georgian nation's history or modern life. Thus, while far from his motherland, the writer followed his literary path maintaining his previous worldview, and artistic and esthetic principles.
